MINCOR Resources has lost its director of exploration, Jim Reeve, who passed away unexpectedly yesterday aged 57.

In a statement today, Mincor reported the tragic loss of Reeve who was well known and highly respected through the Australian mining industry.

"His integrity, honesty, good humour and optimism, his love of life and his passion for geology and his encyclopaedic knowledge of the Kambalda district, were extraordinary," Mincor said.

"He will be sorely missed by all who knew him."

Reeve had a long and illustrious career with WMC Resources and worked briefly as a consultant before signing up with Mincor in 2001 as chief operating officer. He was appointed to the board last year.

"Jim was one of the finest men I ever knew, his death is a great loss to the Australian mining and geological fraternity, a great loss to Mincor, and above all a tragic loss to his family, with whom he was very close," Mincor managing director David Moore said.
